On 11 March 1953, the Artillerie Kaserne on the Oder island in Kuestrin was occupied to about half of its capacity. From 3 to 5 March, a column of 3 to 4 x 85-mm AA guns was daily seen entering and leaving the installation. From 3 to 11 March, an undetermined number of troops almost daily received instruction on 6 AA guns, which [ ] were 25-mm AA guns, and about 14 x 85-mm AA guns in the barracks area. On 3 March, an undetermined number of radar sets with parabolic reflectors and generator, and trucks [ ] were loaded on four flatcars, which left toward Frankfurt.

Comment. According to this information, the light AA units of the 32d AAA Div (US) which, in late February, went to Jueterbog for firing practices, had not returned by 11 March. On 3 March, presumably AAA practice firing devices of type SCR-584 were loaded which [ ] belonged to the division.
